4I.3 Benefits and Support provided4I.3.1

The Commission will establish a dedicated point of contact for employees who are offered Redundancy packages for the purpose of responding to questions and clarifying the offer.

4I.3.2

The Commission will provide a “post Redundancy” support service for employees accepting the Redundancy package. The support services will offer to exited public servants under the Redundancy initiative, assistance to explore other employment or business opportunities in the private sector, NGOs and statutory bodies. Retrenched employees may choose to take an additional payment of $1,000 in lieu of these support services.

4I.4 The alternative of Redeployment

- (1) Employees who did not accept the offer of redundancy may elect to be considered for redeployment within Ministry or Public Service.

of the Commission within two weeks from the date of submission of the RRMP. The information provided to the Commission must include the following:

- a) List of those placed and unplaced
- b) For those unplaced within the Ministry, the Job Description and a short resume on each of the individuals

Based on the above information, the Commission is to assess the probability of staff in redundant posts being placed through vacancies that are likely to arise in the next two (2) months.

(3) The Chief Executive Officer of the Commission will:

- (i) Circulate to all Chief Executive Officers the details of public servants available for redeployment, with a requirement that they respond within five (5) working days on whether or not there are prospects of them being placed within the next two (2) months.

- (iii) If after two (2) months, there is little probability of such placements, the Chief Executive Officer of the Commission will recommend to the Commission that the individuals in the redundant posts be retrenched and receive Separation Package.

When not all posts in an Activity are to be declared redundant

When some staff within an Activity or function is to be retained, or where there are alternatives for different staff taking the Separation Package, the Ministry may call for volunteers or set up a merit based process to enable such staff to declare interest in the posts that are continuing. In these circumstances, a Chief Executive Officer must revise the job descriptions of those continuing to ensure that they reflect requirements [e.g. there may be specific references that must change, if the nature of the work is changing with greater use of information technology this must be included in the job description].

The Chief Executive Officer has two options to manage the necessary reduction in the number of posts:

1. To run a merit based selection process to identify those staff who should be appointed to continuing posts; OR
2. To advertise for volunteers among the affected staff [e.g. if a Ministry is to reduce the number of drivers from 7 to 4, all could be offered the opportunity to volunteer for the Severance Package]. If there are more or fewer volunteers than are required, there will still be a requirement for a merit based selection process to choose those who are best equipped to fill the continuing posts.

1 INTRODUCTION

The Tongan Public Service is part of the machinery of government and consists of agencies whose functions are, inter alia, to support government administration, deliver services to the public and protect the public interest. Over the years various legislations and executive directives have created, in varying sizes and forms, the agencies that constitute the Public Service.

The functions of the Public Service and its agencies have evolved over the years and becoming more complex because of interdependency among the agencies and developing links between agencies and their stakeholders and the general public. This evolution of function should have always been accompanied by administrative development and part of it is the continuous re-structuring of the entire Public Service as well as its agencies to bring their structures in line with the functions that they perform and the strategies that they pursue.

These guidelines are intended to assist agencies in undertaking restructuring of their organizations (but they can also apply to restructuring of the Public Service).

Organisational structures link tasks and people and coordinate them through a hierarchy of reporting relationship and grouping them into functional areas. These guidelines will help agencies to combine tasks, people and resources in such a way that it will improve its performance, encourage frugality with resources and deliver the expected outcomes.

The organisational structure we see on the wall in the head office of an agency is the final outcome of the restructuring process, as outlined in these guidelines. The guidelines represent a menu from which an agency can select a combination of actions and ideas to be implemented so that it continues to adapt its structure to the way its functions evolve and the changing expectations of Government and parliament. The word 'restructuring' is used in the guidelines because reviewing of organisational structures is a continuous process.

2 BACKGROUND RESEARCH

This exercise will provide a better understanding of what the Ministry stands for, what it does and what it is suppose to do. Here are some of the basic resources that would assist in conducting this exercise.

2.1 LEGISLATIONS

Legislations provide the legal framework under which agencies operate and define functions and areas of operation for agencies. These functions include administrative, professional and technical ones which must be reflected in the structure of the agency and its plans.

2.2 ANNUAL REPORTS

The annual reports will assist in determining what the Ministry has been doing. Some of the things that might arise from this source are activities that might have been carried out in the past but are no longer being performed. These activities might be required to be revived.

In summary, the Annual Reports will provide you with the history of your Ministry and an explanation of why things are the way they are at present.

2.3 BUDGET

You will need to understand your budget and how it has been spent. This is available from the Accounts Section. From this you can see budget allocations and the extent to which they have been spent.

The budget can also be broken up into two categories; salary and operations, and by divisions.

This is important to your restructuring review to see if funds are allocated appropriately and to see how your restructuring proposals can impact your budget. For example, should you wish to dissolve at particular division, you will be able to see how much you would be saving.

2.4 STAFF LIST

Your staff list should have information regarding each staff's qualifications, salary level and actual salary. If this is not available you can contact PSC for an electronic copy or the Ministry of Finance. An electronic copy is easier for analysis.

Assuming your Ministry or Department already has a structure, you will need to confirm with the staff list if these officers are strategically located in the structure. For example, someone with an engineering background may be found in an administrative post.

From the staff list and the structure, you can also determine if a particular division has excess staffs in relation to its responsibilities.

If a structure is not already in place, a structure need to be formulated based on the existing arrangements. This will give you a clear picture of how things stand and what needs to be improved. The best software to use for drawing up your structure is Microsoft Visio. This is an additional component to the Microsoft Office program; therefore you will need to contact an IT company if they have this software to be installed in your computer. It is user friendly. Should you require any preliminary training on this please contact PSC.

2.5 INTERNET RESEARCH

The internet can be used to search for similar organisations and how they structure themselves. This will provide you with ideas on how your organisation can be structured to fit your needs.

2.6 REVIEW CORPORATE PLAN & ANNUAL MANAGEMENT PLAN

Your Corporate Plan and Annual Management Plan should form the basis of your structure. From the exercises conducted above, if there are things that need to be reviewed in your Corporate Plan and Annual Management Plan, this is the time to do so. Your Corporate Plan should also encompass legislative obligations under the mandate of your Ministry and reflect the National Strategic Planning Framework.

3 CONSULTATIONS AND OBSERVATIONS

During your background search exercise, questions may have arisen that need clarification from your key staff or Head of Divisions. These should be noted down for consultation and further investigation (observations).

3.1 PRELIMINARY QUESTIONS TO GUIDE

Have some general questions regarding the overall management, capacity and structure of the Ministry and questions for each division/unit or sections. Questions for each division may involve questions about their work processes, staff competencies and their views of how things can be improved. Send these questions to the Head of Divisions and ask them to be prepared for discussions based on these questions and schedule an appropriate time for this meeting. Discussion should not be limited to these questions only. Additional important questions may surface during the discussion.

Also have in mind possible restructuring options to be discussed in the meeting. Please refer to section 5 for these options. This will assist in determining what type of structures that might work.

3.2 MEET WITH MANAGEMENT TEAM

Introduce and explain the restructuring review exercise and why it is necessary. During the discussion based on the preliminary questions formulated, when appropriate, provide the management team with your views on how the Ministry and each division should be structured and invite feedback. This will assist in determining the appropriate structure that will suit everyone and what would work as your Head of Divisions would know best about their division.

In addition, to implement your revised structure you will need their cooperation. Therefore, having your key officers on board will assist in ensuring the success of implementing the preferred structure.

3.3 INDIVIDUAL CONSULTATIONS

By now, you should have a fair idea of how things can be improved in your work place and the appropriate structure for your Ministry. With this in mind, further individual consultation will need to be conducted to confirm this. New information may present itself as well during this individual consultation that may require adjustments to your structure and processes.

3.4 OBSERVE OPERATIONS

Further confirmation can also be conducted through observation of the operations in your Ministry. Determine if the current structure supports what your Ministry is doing and what needs to be conducted. There may be inefficiencies in the process and that some activities in the process may not be required to achieve the same output (effectiveness).

3.5 QUESTIONNAIRES

You may also want to back up your findings with a questionnaire survey. This is important when requiring the honest opinion of the staffs on matters that may be too sensitive to be asked directly. With Ministries that are high in numbers, questionnaires will also be appropriate to ensure a fair coverage of the staffs.

The steps required to design and administer a questionnaire include: defining the objectives of the survey, determining the sampling group, writing the questionnaire, administering the questionnaire, and interpreting the results.

4 EVALUATION

With the options you have acquired up to this point, you will now need to evaluate their feasibility. These are some of the things that you should consider when conducting your evaluation exercise.

4.1 NATIONAL STRATEGIC PLANNING FRAMEWORK

One of the enabling themes in the National Strategic Planning Framework is as follows: "Continue progress to smaller and more efficient government to transfer resources to improved services and maintenance of resources".

This is to provide an overall guide on your approach and direction for restructuring your Ministry.

4.2 CABINET DECISIONS

In addition to the above, government directions that are relevant to your structure review should be considered. It will have a significant impact on your final structure. At present, there are two major decisions that exist and they are Cabinet Decision No. 688 and Cabinet Decision No. 1318. These are attached and they are regarding staffing issues. Budget directions should also be considered.

4.3 REVISED CORPORATE PLAN

The structure of your Ministry should be guided by its mission, goals and strategies laid out in the corporate plans. If there is a function currently being carried out by your Ministry that is not aligned with your mission, then this function should be transferred to the appropriate organization (within government or outside of government).

If there are more than one group in your Ministry that can effectively carry out strategies by being grouped together, then this should be considered. These are some of the issues that should be considered when referring to your REVISED Corporate Plan.

4.4 LEGAL FRAMEWORK

You will need to review your legislations to identify any barriers to your operations or review your structure to ensure that it your Ministry is effectively carrying out its legal obligations. You may find that there are duties stated in your relevant legislations that are not being effectively carried out due to shortages of resources or lack of strategic allocation of resources.

If your Ministry does not have any legal framework to guide and give you the authority to effectively carry out your mission, then this must be considered. The necessary resources or support will need to be in place to enforce your proposed legislations.

4.5 CULTURE

Concentration on functions alone to strategically locate staff may not always yield the desired outcome. You must consider workplace relationships. For example, grouping two people together that does not get along with each other will cause problems. Another example is designating an authoritative role to an officer at lower level whilst there are higher ranking officers will no doubt cause ill feelings and conflicts.

You must also determine the best way to introduce your new structure if you foresee culture shock in the workplace.

4.6 CAPACITY (STAFF, FINANCE AND TECHNOLOGY)

Your new structure should be supported by the necessary staff, finance and technology. Your staff maybe required to be reorganized appropriately to where they would better serve your Ministry's objectives. Some may need to be trained to be able to deliver the required output of which that posts has been designated to conduct according to the new structure (job-redesign). Some may only need to be on contract or daily paid. Where a post is not required under the new structure, this may call for redeployment or be made redundant.

The new structure may require additional posts but the Ministry should ensure that the necessary funding for this is available or would be available. Consultation with the Ministry of Finance and National Planning should determine this.

Technology should also be utilized. You may find that some processes can be automated to be cost effective and be more efficient requiring less manual work, hence less staff. Again, you must ensure that you have the required funding to implement this either for acquiring new software or hiring experts to formulate the automated process.

4.7 PROCESSES

Your internal processes will also determine how your Ministry is structured (divisions and units/sections) and how many posts you will require. First you must determine the required output of the process and determine the activities necessary and their corresponding resources or input. A flow chart will be very useful in this exercise to visualize the situation and test its efficiency and effectiveness. For example, you may find that some activities can be streamlined and making the process shorter and requiring less resources.

Some processes may be labour intensive and some technologically intensive. In other words, some activities may be automated and requires no staff. Therefore, the process to achieve that output will require less staff.

The goal here is to make your processes more productive and cost effective. In being productive, your Ministry should be efficient in using resources by trying to do more (outputs) with the same or less of the resources available (inputs). Cost effective is when your Ministry achieves its goals by delivering more with the same or less resources.

4.8 DELIVERY OF QUALITY SERVICES

Quality is 'fitness for purpose' and the public is fully aware of their right to have access to quality service. The amount of resources available and required expertise and skills should be strategically structured to contribute substantially to the quality of services. But it must be remembered that social justice and equity are central to service delivery to the public, but not how cheap the service is provided.

The quality of a service is made up of a number of components: must address fully the needs in question; be provided on a timely basis; be communicated to the users that they are available; be available when required; be value for money if users pay; and be at least very satisfactory with positive the feedback from users.

4.9 STAKEHOLDER AND CLIENT MANAGEMENT

Stakeholders are persons and bodies that have direct interest in what your Ministry does. Clients are persons or bodies that benefit from the services of the agency.

A focus on responsiveness to stakeholders and client needs must be emphasized in plans of the agency and should be reflected in how you structure your organisation. There is then the obligation to ensure that their complaints and needs are addressed. These are done through outreach programs, training and grievance handling procedures. The efficiency in dealing with these and addressing them adequately, contribute to stakeholder and client satisfaction.

Managing stakeholders and clients involves a number of elements: communication channels are put in place; relationship between the agency and the stakeholders is monitored closely by establishing points of contacts with the agency; plans put in place for engagement of stakeholders and clients in decision making and service delivery; and process for identification of needs and plans for addressing them.

4.10 SEPARATION OF POLICYMAKING FROM SERVICE DELIVERY

The policy making functions of the agency can be separated from its service delivery responsibilities, if the agency wishes to focus on its core functions only, and if it wants to be efficient and cost effective.

A major function of an agency is to provide the Minister with policy advice and to ensure that the policies of Government are carried out, either by the agencies themselves or in partnership with other stakeholders. In this regard, the proper purview of the agency is policy making whereas the delivery of service should be undertaken by 'special' agencies and private providers. This means that to deliver services, the agencies must contract out the services to private providers, develop a network of service providers, partner with private providers or empower and fund special agencies to deliver services.

4.11 DIRECT PROVISION

Agencies should directly provide services that are core functions. These core functions are defined in legislations and executive instruments which reflects the wishes of parliament and intentions Government.

4.12 COMMERCIALISATION

Some services currently provided by the agency can be provided for a fee. Such fees can be set at below the market commercial rates, for equity reasons or at near commercial rates for economic reasons. The revenues earned are either deposited into general revenue or part of it is retained in the agency's budget to be used to provide more of the same activities or improve their quality. Commercialised activities are prime targets for corporatisation or privatisation.

4.13 MARKET TESTING AND COMPETITION

Market testing should be used to test whether a service in the Ministry should be corporatised or privatised. If there is sufficient number of competitors for the provision of a service, then the service could either be contracted out, corporatised or completely privatised. The number of competitors depends on the size of the market and the regulatory frameworks governing competition. If the number of competitors is sufficient and the size of the market is large enough, then the agency might want to contract out, corporatise or privatise the provision of the service.

5 RESTRUCTURING OPTIONS

When structuring, you may be required to conduct the following options.

5.1 MERGE

Separate but sufficiently similar units within the same agency may be merged with other units to create a new unit. The new unit can maintain the same size or it can expand as a result of the amalgamation. The amalgamation can result in cost savings because the previous separate units are now combined, overlaps and duplications now eliminated, and operations more streamlined. The same could be done with separate agencies but whose functions are sufficiently similar to warrant amalgamation.

The exercise must be done carefully to ensure that none of the core functions are lost in the process and that critical resources are not taken away either.

5.2 CONSOLIDATION

Consolidation is similar to amalgamation except that units or agencies with sufficiently similar functions should be tacked on to new units or agencies with appropriate mandates for such functions. Existing resources are combined and the services are now delivered by one single unit or agency. This will contribute to administrative efficiency because the services or operations are delivered or maintained under one work unit or agency, with extra resources available to be dedicated to other priorities.

5.3 STREAMLINING

Agencies should streamline to improve efficiency by looking at various operations and earmark certain aspects which overlap or duplicated for elimination of overlapping roles and duplication of functions or whether certain units should be combined through amalgamation or consolidation. Streamlining is often carried out in order to improve administrative efficiency and cost effectiveness in agencies.

5.4 CHARTERED SPECIAL AUTONOMOUS AGENCIES

Special autonomous agencies could be chartered to deliver services which are not core or which would be more efficiently delivered outside of the agency. The mandate of the special autonomous agency is spelled out in a charter (preferably under law) which will outline the mission, goals and responsibilities as well as the performance standards for delivery of services. The special autonomous agency can also charge users to fund its operations and service delivery at near commercial rates, if required. Government can also make its own funding contribution on certain terms and conditions but some special autonomous agencies may be expected to recover their costs from users through competition with others. In this case, Government does not provide contributions.

5.5 CORPORATISATION

If an operation or an unit or a whole agency can operate on a commercial basis, then it should be corporatised. Corporatisation would require a sound legal framework and initial funding outlays. Some corporatised bodies need to have dividends returned to Government but can also be allowed to levy charges on government agencies as users.

Services may be corporatised because they are commercial in nature so that the provision is responsive to demands and price levels.

5.6 PRIVATISATION

If an operation or a service can be performed by providers in the private sector and are not a core function of the Ministry or the government, then the division responsible should then be totally privatized. The rules for 'market testing' and 'competition' apply to ensure competitiveness in the provision of services. Privatisation needs a sound legal framework for the transition of the operation or service provision from the agency to the private sector.

If the service should be entirely provided by the private sector because it has the capability and resources to do so, then the services should be privatised, while the agency regulates only.

5.7 CONTRACTING OUT

Contracting out of services to private sector providers should be undertaken if it will reduce cost and provide quality. This can be possible when there are sufficient numbers of providers to compete so that cost is lower and quality is improved.

If contracting out requires the Ministry to pay for this service and not the customers, the Ministry should be prepared to meet these costs.

5.8 NETWORKING OF SERVICE PROVIDERS

An agency can develop voluntary networks of service providers in the sector to deliver services. The networks operate on partnership trust and a mutual understanding of common benefits gained from the joint-delivery of services to the beneficiaries. The agency may be required to co-fund some of the resources required.

5.9 PUBLIC PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP

Services could be provided through arranged partnership between public agencies and private sector providers. This partnership is to co-deliver services in areas where the private sector has the capability and the agency has the resources, or where outreach by the agency will be limited whereas the private sector has the advantage of geographical spread. It also works well if the private sector has both the resources and the capability, the agency only provides funding, if required, and regulates the activities of the private providers.

5.10 HUMAN RESOURCE ARRANGEMENTS

You may also like to consider the following for restructuring your staffing.

5.10.1 PART-TIME AND CASUAL WORK

Part-time and casual work could be engaged in situations where work is affected by seasonal factors and where extra staff are required to supplement the existing workforce because of rising demand for the services of the agency. When the demand falls, the part-time and casual staff are terminated as the normal volume of work can now be performed by the existing workforce. Part-time and casual workers can share jobs, where one job is shared two workers.

5.10.2 SHIFT WORK

Shift work can be used to ameliorate situations where demand for services to be provided longer hours. Existing staff are divided into two or more groups that rotate or shift around the clock to provide the services. If the existing staff are not sufficient, part-time and casual staff can be hired for a specific period of time. Shifts can be made to overlap to cater for the need to provide services during core hours of the day.

5.10.3 JOB RE-DESIGN

Job design, as part of restructuring, can be used to redistribute responsibilities as appropriate. One way of redesigning jobs is to simplify them ('simplification'). This means that the worker is allowed to perform a small number of narrow activities so that efficiency can be enhanced. This is useful if the staff can be substituted at any time and new workers easily trained.

Another way of job redesign is 'job rotation' where workers may be shifted periodically through different jobs in different units or locations. This is common where there is a need for workers to learn other tasks to improve their capability, innovativeness and understanding of the agency, or to provide extra staff in areas where work volume is greater.

In some situations, especially when there are fewer staff for the tasks to be performed, 'job enlargement' and 'job enrichment' can be used to increase the responsibilities assigned to a staff. The job is enlarged by adding more tasks to the job and the job is enriched by adding authority to make decisions and control the work to be done.

5.10.4 DOWN SIZING-RIGHT SIZING

Down-sizing an agency involves reducing the number of work levels, especially the middle levels. The responsibilities are re-distributed to other levels. This often happens when the agency is affected by consolidation, amalgamation or corporatisation and privatisation. The structure of the organisation becomes flatter and administrative efficiency and effectiveness may happen.

5.10.5 CENTRALISATION-DECENTRALISATION

Centralisation should be practiced if there is a need for overall coordination from the top so that decisions are made properly and according to standards and procedures. Decentralisation should be practiced if there is a need to ease the workload at the top levels and facilitate efficient decision making at the lower levels. Centralisation works well when the authority to make decisions is concentrated at the top level. Decentralisation involves the delegation of authority to the lower levels.

5.10.6 DELEGATION

Delegation, the assignment of authority and responsibility to lower levels to utilize resources and make decisions about performance, should be used to ensure that those who have authority to carry out certain responsibilities, are accountable to what they do. It allows work to be carried out more quickly at the lower levels.

6 WRITE UP

It is important that your structure be documented and explained (overall structure and by division). This will provide opportunity for further review in the future but most importantly, your staff will be able to understand where they stand and how their responsibilities contribute to the overall structure of the Ministry.

Work processes will also need to be documented (flow chart) and job descriptions rewritten if necessary.

7 CONCLUSION

These guidelines are not exhaustive of what should be taken into account in reviewing organisational structures of the Public Service or individual agencies. These guidelines bring together what has already been practiced, reforms that were recommended by previous reviews and actions currently being undertaken to restructure either the public service or its agencies. It would also be useful to consult the general literature and other official documents to gain more insight to Public Service reform and reviews to supplement these guidelines.
